

People at CTG

Megan Sutherland
Program Assistant

Specialty

- Archives and Records Management
- Open Government – Governance and Information Management Strategy

Brief Bio

As a program staff assistant here at CTG, Megan's focus is on providing support to staff on various projects by assisting in the development, planning, management, analysis and writing.

In December 2012, Megan completed her graduate study at the University at Albany's College of Computing and Information with a Master's degree in Information Science with concentrated studies in Archives and Records Management. Her graduate studies at Albany focused primarily on preservation and conservation management in archives administration, library services, records management and procedures (i.e. inventory, records and information systems, management policies and development, etc.). She also holds a Bachelor's in History from SUNY Albany.

Prior to working at CTG, Megan worked with the Committee on Open Government as an intern in which I focused on city and town clerks and IT professionals working in government at the local level. The research was conducted within the State of New York and was designed to study and assess how the use of, or lack of, technology affected management and access to government documents. She also interned at CTG and worked on an ongoing project to develop a shared code enforcement data repository for cities in the Capital Region.

Selected Presentations

Sutherland, M. (2011). Evaluating the Importance of Technology and the Role of Information Providers within Local Governments in New York. Albany, New York: Committee on Open Government.

Education

- M.A., Information Science, University at Albany – SUNY, 2012
- B.A., History, University at Albany – SUNY, 2010