This report reflects the support and ideas of many members of the research enterprise.

Linda Massaro, Chief Information Officer at the National Science Foundation (NSF), Larry Brandt, NSF Digital Government Program Manager, and John McGowan, Director, Division of Extramural Activities, National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases at the National Institutes of Health (NIH), provided the vision and the resources for this investigation to take place.

Many members of these and other organizations within the enterprise shared their knowledge, expertise, and insights so that this research agenda could be developed. We particularly acknowledge the workshop presentations made by Akhil Kumar, University of Colorado at Boulder, Alan Dennis, University of Indiana, and Mark Adkins, University of Arizona. This report benefits greatly from their expertise on the current state of understanding and ongoing research in their respective fields.

Special thanks go to Fred Wendling at NSF, to Megan Columbus at NIH, and to Jane Krumm-Schwan, Jim Costello, Linda Keane, Chip McCormick, and DeAnna Perry of The Center for Technology in Government, for their indispensable contributions to this project, to the workshops, and to the production of this report.
